

“BRIC: What is the deal?”

Brazil, Russia, India and China are societies that have experienced very high GDP and employment growth in recent years, but have very limited social welfare and employment regulation. How has the record of growth and economic instability affected them – what can we learn about the way work in these economies has changed?

Prof Enrique de la Garza Toledo (Universidad Autónoma Metropolitana, Mexico) is a sociologist and author of 'Convenios y bonos de productividad en empresas mexicanas', (2007) and 'Tratado Latinoamericano de Sociología' (2006). His research focuses on industrial relations, labour process, atypical employment and the fragmentation of work.

Prof David Lane (University of Cambridge) has worked on the sociology and politics of the Soviet Union for over 40 years. His most recent research looks at 'Post-Socialist States and the World Economy: the Impact of Global Economic Crisis'. He has recently written on: Russian banks, the Russian oil industry and the changing political and economic elite structure of Russia.

Dr Pun Ngai (Hong Kong Polytechnic University) is a social anthropologist and author of 'Made in China: Women Factory Workers in a Global Workplace', which examines the Chinese dagongmei, rural migrant working girls who toil in the global capitalist factories in socialist China's Shenzhen Special Economic Zone. She is currently researching the conditions of construction workers in Beijing.

Profs Premilla D'Cruz and Ernesto Noronha (Indian Institute of Management, Ahmedabad) work on emotional labour, ethnicity and global outsourcing. Their publications include 'Employee identity in Indian call centres: The notion of professionalism.' (2009); 'India a country study' (2010) in 'Global outsourcing and remote work.' (Geneva: ILO) and 'The exit coping response to workplace bullying: The contribution of inclusivist and exclusivist HRM strategies' Employee Relations, (2010) 32(2): 102-120.