The body has become a prominent concept within sociology and is becoming a major feature of analysis for those investigating contemporary issues of social exclusion, welfare and policy.

This One Day conference aims to foster dialogue between sociological theory and social policy through exploring contemporary debates around issues such as age and ageing, care and care-giving, disability, health and well-being, social capital and social exclusion.

We welcome abstracts from researchers working within and across the disciplines of social policy and sociology who wish to contribute to this exciting area of study.

Presentations should aim to be 20 minutes in length and will be organised into thematic streams.
