

Violence Against Women Study Group Day Event
Learning About Violence Against Women and Girls

3rd June 2016, 9.30am-4pm, Francis Close Hall campus, Cheltenham

For over thirty years, the Violence Against Women group has provided a feminist space for academics, practitioners, activists and students to share ideas, foster thoughts and interests, network and support each other in working to combat violence against women.

This seminar will focus on some of the innovative work in learning (and educating) about violence against women in a variety of contexts. Learning about violence against women and girls takes place in all sorts of settings and contexts, not limited to but including:

- Professional settings including training for professions
- Work with children and young people including youth work, universities, schools and colleges
- Personal networks and friends and our internal, personal challenges
- In the workplace – clients, colleagues and customers
- VAW education research and practice

Papers and posters from academics, activists and survivors will form a starting/continuation point for discussions. Our study days are open to all and are very friendly, relaxed and welcoming spaces for all interested people to come and share in discussions, debates and thinking around violence against women and girls.
